COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

CITATION: R. v. P.N.D., 2012 ONCA 866

DATE: 20121207

DOCKET: C51661

Rosenberg, Cronk and Pepall JJ.A.

BETWEEN

Her Majesty the Queen

Respondent

and

P.N.D.

Appellant

Daniel J. Brodsky, for the appellant

Lisa Joyal, for the respondent

Heard: December 6, 2012

On appeal from the sentence imposed on December 17, 2007 by Justice Gerald R. Morin of the Superior Court of Justice, sitting without a jury.

APPEAL BOOK ENDORSEMENT

[1] There is no merit to this appeal. The trial judge's reasons disclosed no error. In particular, the summary of factors at para. 49, which are supported by the evidence, fully support the disposition.

[2] The fact that there may have been a lapse in the hospital's supervision does not demonstrate that the indeterminate detention disposition was inappropriate. To the contrary, that the appellant was able to sexually assault a child in the few seconds that he evaded supervision demonstrates that the disposition by the trial judge was appropriate.

[3] Finally, the decision in R. v. Bedard, 2009 ONCA 678, does not support the appellant's position. Bedard may involve a more dangerous individual, but this appellant fits well within the category of dangerous offenders, which is admitted, and the disposition of indeterminate detention was also appropriate.

[4] There was no reason to believe that the appellant could be controlled in the community for the reasons detailed in the trial judge's complete reasons.

[5] Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed.
